

Dairy Report

Dairy- US milk production during March is estimated to have been .6% larger than last year due to a 2.7% increase in milk per cow yields and a 2.1% smaller milk cow herd. The dairy cow herd in March was unchanged from the prior month. Milk production is seasonally trending higher but should peak next month. This factor and expectations of milk output declines compared to 2009 are anticipated to pressure the dairy complex higher. The CME cheese markets may be in the process of carving out a bottom. The CME spot butter market could meet resistance at $1.60.
